New York City Ballet Principal Dancers to Lead Workshop with Students from Berkshire Arts & Technology Charter Public School

ADAMS, Ma – For the second year in a row, the New York City Ballet will include Berkshire Arts & Technology Charter Public School in their trip to Williams College on Friday, Oct. 14 from 11:45 a.m.-12:45 p.m.

Two principal dancers from the world-famous ballet company will conduct an hour-long workshop with a group of about 30 BART students at Williams College.

“We love this visit and are thrilled to have the dancers work with our students again this year,” said Julia Bowen, executive director at BART. “I know the students and faculty were impressed by how easily the dancers could translate their passion for ballet into an engaging workshop for our students.”

The program will introduce students to Liebeslieder Walzer, a work based on the music of Johannes Brahms and choreographed by George Balanchine. The workshop will take place at the Williams College '62 Center for Theater and Dance.

The company will be performing at the Williams College '62 Center for Theatre and Dance on Saturday, Oct. 15 at 7:30 p.m.

BART thanks both Williams College and Bob and Martha Lipp for making this special opportunity available to BART students.
